

Negro Editor Says Dixie Needs More 'Uncle Toms'

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — "The South needs more so-called Uncle Toms, to keep the Negro race from being led over a precipice," according to Perry Greene, editor of the weekly Jackson Advocate.

In an editorial last week Green said that Negro leaders who have pleaded moderation on the segregation issue and have sought to maintain a "friendly respectful attitude" to white leaders have been called "Uncle Toms."

The editor said "new and brash Negro leadership" has caused the members of his race to "lose whatever welcome they might have had in the councils of authority by vituperative, vindicative and calumnious speeches."

Green declared that the masses of Negroes in the South are beginning to see that they are being led over a precipice by the siren calls of the new Negro leadership.

The newspaperman pointed out that the 'Uncle Tom' name was calculated by the "new Negro leadership to subject conservative Negroes to ridicule, derision and contempt by the Negro community."

Green placed the late Booker T. Washington at the head of the list of "Uncle Toms."

"The greatest need for the Negro in Jackson, Miss., and the rest of the South is more and more 'Uncle Toms,'" Green stated.
