Caucastan male is determined to keep his women to himself and at the same time frequently claims the diving right and sacred privilege of taking and appropriating the women of the darker races. And this is the thing that irritates the manhood of the darker races. And the section of America south of Mason 1 Dixon's line, which goes into hysterics about the legal mixing of tack and white, is the very section which has witnessed the abundant mixing during slavery days and sometimes witnesses the illegal and clandestine mixing

now. "Consistency, Thou Art a Jewel."

The Anglo-Saxon may not know it, but he is on trial before the bar of civilization. His professions and actions are keenly watched by the other European nations, by Latin-America, Asia and Africa. The traditions of English law and justice and American democracy and freedom have given the Anglo-Saxon a prestige and moral ascendancy in the world, which far exceeds his military achievements. But just now England's treatment of Ireland, West Africa, South Africa, Egypt and India, and America's treatment of her black citizens, especially in the Southern States, has caused the world to ask, "Where is the English law and justice and American democracy and freedom?" which have been extolled in the songs, 'God Save the King" and "My Country Tis of Thee?" Is America still "The land of the free and the home of the brave"?

The world war has shown how little the civilization of Christian Europe has advanced beyond the civilization of pagan Rome And it is up to America to determine whether the predictions of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg speech were the misty vaporings of a rapt poet or the prophetic vision of a practical statesman. "Can the idealism of Jesus of Nazareth be translated into actual deeds?" is the question the modern world must answer. "Is the freedom and the justice of the Declaration of Independence a myth? Is the democracy of Abe Lincoln's Gettysburg speech an iridescent dream and rainbow vision? Is his talk of "a government of the people, by the feople and for the people" a wild dream of the imagination, a utopian desire? are questions which the white, yellow, brown and black worlds are expecting America to answer

Mr Pound intimates that the instinct of race "is based upon something deeper than reason." Whenever any attitude of the mind. any color prejudice or caste proscription cannot be justified at the bar of reason, an attempt is made to justify it before the bar of "consistency" was as rare and priceless as "a jewel of purest ray conscience by calling it instinctive. A discussion of this subject will involve psychological considerations which we will take up next week, when we will survey the respective claims of reason and

"WHAT THE LOBSTER TEACHES."

HE lobster is not a very handsome animal. But if you eat a lobster salad when your stomach is not operloaded and when the lobster is fresh, your gustatory nerves will enjoy a pleasant thrill and you will experience no after effects. If, on the other hand, you partake of that delicious bit of food when for digestive apparatus has plenty of work to do, you may experience the known as nightmare. While if you extratale lobator, you will acute indigestion and may get ptomaine poisoning.

So the word lobster may conjure up pleasant or unpleasant mem ories in your mind. It all depends upon your physical state and the state of the lobster, when you endeavor to appropriate him as an article of food.

These reflections were caused by seeing an editorial note entitled. 'Don't Be a Lobster," in the Thrift Magazine.

The phrase "He is a regular lobster" is commonly used in daily speech. It usually means that a man is unreasonably cross, disagreeable, gloomy, obstinate, stubborn or cranky. When you call a man "a lobster," it does not mean that he has necessarily a bad heart, but that you can't reason with him or do anything with him and hence give him up as a hopeless case.

If you happen to put your hand in a basket of live, kicking lobsters, you will understand why people in disgust will refer to a man as a lobster. You will find that your hand is uncomfortably imprisoned in one of the lobster's claws and that he will not let go. It matters not what your motives are for diving your hand in the lobster's basket. You may put your hand in accidentally. You may intend to put the lobster in a more comfortable position, or you may desire to inspect him before buying. The lobster will not reason about the whys and wherefores. He will blindly and instinctively grab and clutch and he will hold on. So usually when you refer to a man as a regular lobster, refer to some such unpleasant experience as we have just mentioned.

But the writer in Thrift's Magazine does not mean this. He has in mind a psychic characteristic of the lobster.

Under the caption "Don't be a Lobster." he says:

"We frequently hear used in a slang way, 'he is a regular lobster,' Now, there may be more truth than slang in the expression, because there are a lot of human lobsters in the world. A lobster, when left high and dry among the rocks, has not enough energy to work his way back to the sea, but waits for the tide to bring the sea to him. If it does not come, he stays right where he is and dies, too fazy to put forth any effort himself.

"Many men are stranded on the rocks of business. Instead of putting forth their own energies they are waiting for some grand friendly billow of good fortune to set them afloat."

There is food for thought in this statement. There are two classes of men in the world, those who expect some happy turn of fortune to land them in clover, and those who go out and take the initiative. The levelers and all other tradesmen and old Negro, and by old we do not mean old in years, but old in attitude mechanics are "blacks" Many of the old Negro, and by old we do not mean old in years, but old in attitude of mind, waited for something to turn up. The Negro is endeavoring to turn up things himself. The old Negro prayed to the Lord to deliver him the good things of life. The new Negro may pray but he also goes out and endeavors to bring things to pass.

The old Negro complained because white men would not land him in a soft snap job and open up opportunities for him. The new Negro creates jobs for himself and opens up opportunities for himself. The advice, "Don't be a lobster" is sound advice.

REPUBLICAN RECONSTRUCTION.

N elaborate article in the New York Times on Saturday, February 5, had as headlines "Hays Names Committee to Find Solution of Negro Problem in the Party." It also stated that drastic changes were expected and that members will report a scheme for reapportionment of delegates to conventions.

This impresses us as grasping at the shadow and missing the substance, as saving at the spigot and losing at the bung hole.

It is very well "to adopt a just and equitable basis of representation in future national conventions," but why not "adopt a just and built and owned by blacks. equitable basis of representation in the House of Representatives involve the enforcement of and the electoral college? a provision of the fourteenth ent to the Constitution which stranchised the representation in provides that when voters are the lower branch of Congress and in the electors college shall be proportionately reduced.

UARY 12, 195

At present several Southern States which have disfranchised the Negro have twice as many representatives in the House of Representatives and in the electoral college as they are legally and morally entitled to. If Southern States can have twice their quota of representatives in Congress and the electoral college, we see no crime in their having twice their quota in Republican national conventions.

If any reconstruction is contemplated, why not lay the ax at the rcot of the whole trouble, at Southern Congressmen and electors representing voters who have been disfranchised and yet at the same time counted in as a basis of representation?

The Truth About Barbados Told by a Man Who Knows It.

To the Editor of The Negro World: Dear Sir:-The two articles on Barprinted in the New York World on Sunday and Monday are grossly exaggerated, misleading and to a great extent untrue. Especially so in the description of its "blacks."

Like every white American writer. Mr. Selbold runs true to form When writing about black people they pick . out the few that are least fortunate or most degraded and elaborate on them as the "blacks." # "CONSISTENCY, THOU ART A JEWEL."

ONSISTENCY, Thou Art a Jewel," is one of the phrases which has been glibly repeated without men realizing its full import. A jewel is a very rare and costly article. A brilliant stone of small size, which will scintillate when the rays of the sun or artificial light strikes it, will bring thousands of dollars or a small fortune to the lucky finder of it. And when the thinker seined the phrase, "Consistency, Thou Art a Jewel," he meant that serene. These reflections were suggested by an elaborate article by Arthur Pound on "What Are We Going to Do With the Black Manl-A Frank Discussion of the Eternally Perplexing Negro Problem Which Has Wrinkled the Brow of Uncle Sam for Many Generations." This article appeared in Flint Saturday Night, a Western weekly magazine, on January 29, 1921. It takes up over five columns. But for lack of space we would gladly reprint this splendid article in full in the Negro World, for it is actually what it claims to be-"A Frank Discussion of the Eternally Perplexing Negro Problem." There is no side-stepping, ducking, evading or closing the eyes to the truth, as is customary with many Cancasian writers in these sophisticated days, when the moral sense officen blurred, the conscience elastic and unpleasant facts white-wo columns Mr. Pound speaks of the Negro's y in war and peace, the enthusiasm with which ted American civilization and his patience and forbearsuffering and unjust discrimination.

. In his disguosis of the American race problem Mr. Pound is en, penetrating and unerring. But when he comes to the solution of the perplexed problem he seems to be somewhat baffled and pergred. He recognizes that the North has acquiesced and is likely sequiesce in the South's defiance of the constitution and determition to maintain white supremacy. He sees a difficulty in Booker Washington's philosophy, "When we are in the world economtiye then the world will find it difficult to keep us down politically and socially." Mr. Pound asks, "But suppose that Negro prosperity mirely increased Negro power without winning for that power an set in channels open to the poorest white citizen? Would the ngement, and would the men Ah! That was the fly in the cintment of Dr. Booker T. Washington's optimism and roseate picture of the Black Man's future in America. But the reader is naturally interested in the final conclusion. And this is Mr. Pound's final summing up. He thus concludes his suggestive article: "If our black comrade on the American Ship of State cannot be treated as a citizen vested with the full power of citizenship, then the only way to keep him from desiring to scuttle the ship is to treat him as a human being whose assistance we need. That ought not to be too difficult for the men who wrote the Decferation of Independence and ratified the thirteenth, fourteenth and Effects amendments to the Constitution of the United States." But we are interested most in the psychological insight revealed whook. And that gives us our text, "Consistency, Thou Art a Zewel." Mr. Pound clearly recognizes that dread of intermarriage the black and white races and a revulsion to absorbing the Negro race in America . 1 masse is at the root of jim crowism, segregation, franchisemer, social ostracism of the Negro in America and the ring of him from lucrative employment. He does not go deeply me the ethics of preventing a human being from developing as a fitted being and advancing in life, for fear that if he becomes intelmanly and self-respecting and "gets up in the world," your

And first here the "Consistency, Thou Art a Jewel," idea comes Mr. Found says: "Public opinion here is dead set against mixhis pinion is based upon something deeper the reson it cannot be argued away, and must be accepted a familiar in the case."
