Real Politics Deeply Rooted In Economic Woodson, Carter Philadelphia Tribune (1912-); Sep 15, 1932; ProQu pg. 7

"New" Negro Interested in Making Contribution to Party Welfare

Not Asking For Money

By CARTER G. WOODSON

Not Asking For Money By CARTER G. WOODSON "Are you going to follow the machine heading the campaign for the party among our people this year?" said a Nerro to me recently. "I object to those men because they belong to the old school. Those old fellows have not advanced us anywhere. They are too easily satisfied with little things, and they quickly compromise. We need men who will fight for principle rather than for what they can get for them-selves. "Do you mean to say," I inquired, "that all Negro politicians belong to this class which you have the us characterized?" "No, but the large majority of they dealist, it have observed much of this fatal course myself. I have vare that this man was in many re-spects rights. I have observed much of this fatal course myself. I have vare the they much discussion 1 had to con-cede that this man was in many re-spects rights. I have observed much of this fatal course myself. I have have watched the development of things from bad to worse until we all but face elimination. It seems that some of our spokesmen have lacked both character and common senses, for even if they were low enough to undertake some of the things which they have had sufficient common senses, for even if they were low enough to undertake some of the things which they have had sufficient common senses, for even if they were low enough to undertake some of the things which they have had sufficient common senses, for even if they were low enough to undertake some of the things which they have had sufficient common senses, for even if they were low enough to undertake some of the things which they have had sufficient common senses, for even if they were low enough to undertake some of the things which they have had sufficient common senses not to expect raborable results from such ef-tors.

had sufficient common sense not to expect faborable results from such ef-forts. VENALITY FLOURISHING Thier course has been interesting. At first the white man used the No-gro leader by giving him a drink co-casionally. The next step was to give-him sufficient money to set up drinks in the name of the white candidate. When drinking at the expense of the candidate became so common the poli-ticlans fell back on the distribution of funds in small amounts of a few dol-lars each. When this finally proved to be insufficient, however, the politi-clans had to go a bit further-and pro-vide jim crow jobs in certain back-grounds with the understanding that, the function of the so-called office would be merely nominal and the in-cumbents would have no close contact with white people. In this stage we find curselves today. The undesirable aspect of the affair is that the Negroi in spite of changes from one method of approach to that of another is never brought into the inner circle of the party with which he is affiliated. He is always kept on the outside and is used as a.means to an end. It has been unnecessary for the white man to change this proce-dure, for until recent years he has gen-erally found it possible to satisfy the majority of Negroes with little things and to crush those who clanner for mere recognition.

and to crush those who channel for mere recognition. BATTLING FOR RECOGNITION In spite of this attitude and the ef-fort to continue this polley toward the race, however, the New Negro, I find, is willing to battle for more considera-tion. He is not knocking at the door of any particular party. He is rather thocking at the Negro himself. This new thinker does not care how the Ne-gro votes, but he wants him to use for owner, the the wants him to use the dead for some traditional favor. This new thinker has the ut-most contempt for the old Negro in politics, who is still clamoring for the few offices long earmarked as Negro jobs.

most contenne. In the politics, who is still clamoring for the few offices long earmarked as Negro jobs. These few station and national positions formerly set aside for Negroes have paled into insignificance when compared with the many highly compensatory positions now occupied by Negroes as a result of their development in other spheres. A Negro prominent in education, business, or professional life can earn more in a few months than the most successful politician can earn more in a few months than the most successful politician can earn in years. On the other hand, too, the increase of race prejudice, which this polity has doubtless added, frightens the political leaders from granting their Negro co-workers and the Negro in politics, too, has heared something that the old "ward heelers" have been able to realize, namely, not only that the few offices allotted Negroes are insignificant but that even if the Negro received a proportionate share of the spoils, the race cannot hope to solve any serious problems by the changing fortunes of politics. Real politics, the science of gov- (Continuec on Page 15)

produced with p

Woodson

(Continued from Page 7)

ernment, is deeply rooted in the economic foundation of the social order. To figure greatly in politics the Negro must be a great figure in politics. ..À class of people slightly, lifted above poverty, therefore, can never have poverty, much influence in political circles. The Negro must develop character and worth to make him a desirable every where so that he will not have to knock at the doors of political parties but will have them thrown open to him. The New Negro in politics, then, is not asking the party for money. He is not seeking to hire himself for a pittance to swing voters in line. He is going to contribute to the campaign of the party pleasing him, rather than draw upon it for an allowance to drive the wolf from the door during the three months of the political canvass. He will not speak for others in the campaign. They will speak for him. It will be considered a stroke of good fortune that a Negro of such influence and character has aligned himself with a party, and this fact will speak elo-quently for the element to which he belongs

MAN FIRST, THEN POLITICIAN

The New Negro in politics is not a politician. He is a man. He is trying to give the world something rather than extract something from it. The world as he sees it does not owe him anything, certainly not a political office, and he is not trying to secure one. If he goes into office, it will be as a sacrifice, because his valuable time is required elsewhere. If he is needed by his country in a civil position, he may respond to the call as a matter of duty, for his usefulness is otherwise assured. From such a Negro, then, we may expect sound advice, intelligent leadership, and constructive effort for the good of all elements of our population.

When such Negross go into office you will not find them specializing in things which peculiarly concern the Negross, offering merely anti-hynching bills and measures for the special relief of members of their race. The new Negro in politics will see his opportunity not in thus restricting himself but in visioning the whole social and economic order with the Negro as a part of it. In thus working for the benefit of all as prompted by his liberal mindedness the new Negro will do much more to bring the elements together for the common good than he will be able to do in prating only of the ills of his particular corner.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.